Allergies

- Preterm babies are at no more risk of developing an allergy than term babies.
- If you are breastfeeding, the risk of developing an allergy-like condition called Coeliac Disease will be reduced if you introduce foods containing gluten before you stop breastfeeding.
- It is best to give foods made with wheat (for example bread and pasta), oats, barley and rye between five and seven months.

Preparing for meal times

With a little preparation and patience, meal times can be fun. Don't introduce solids when your baby is very hungry or tired, or when you are rushed or busy.

Some babies can become distracted or uninterested. If your baby does get very hungry and frustrated, give a little milk first and then try solids.

Most babies are ready for solid foods between 4 and 6 months, but a few may find solids hard to handle in the beginning. The result? Baby may seem to gag during feedings.
